

Gower Peninsula

The Gower Peninsula was the UK's first area of outstanding natural beauty (AONB) and it is becoming increasingly well known for its beautiful coastline and tranquil interior. At just sixteen miles long by seven miles wide, it juts out into the Bristol Channel and creates its own little micro climate with magnificent sweeps of sandy beaches to the South and acres of marshland rich in flora and fauna to the North. As interest in the area increases there are more opportunities to try out activities within the landscape, whilst the position of our self catering property means that you will be well placed to access the Brecon Beacons and even Pembrokeshire as an easy day trip. The festival city of Swansea lives up to it's name, and with its own great beach, the marina and beautiful parkland such as Clyne Gardens and Singleton Park it deserves some exploration in its own right. Below is just a flavour of what is available in the area. Follow us on Twitter and Facebook to find out more.

If we have whetted your appetite for a Gower visit and you wish to explore further there are a number of useful websites which give you an idea of what is on offer. Remember to bookmark our site so you can return and book your accommodation. Happy planning!

Visit Swansea Bay: Provide a wealth of information about the local area with some lovely video clips and an effective search mechanism. Remember to check them out on Facebook and Twitter too.

Enjoy Gower: Again an excellent site for getting a feel of the area. I have selected a landing page which gives a detailed overview of beach facilities, but you can move on to other areas of interest as required.

Explore Gower: Provides interesting information about local activities and events as well as information about the Gower landscape.
